WHEN RICHARD W. TUCKER, a member of the local board of supervisors, was invited to speak, he warned that the public comments period had been turned into “a hostile environment” in which “the orderly conduct of the meeting is further impeded.”

The board’s current rules of procedure mandate that a commenter is off limits if they “engage in behavior or activities that disrupt, delay, or endanger the orderly conduct of a meeting and the official business of the board.”

Other boards have made rules that allow members of the public to be interrupted by a supervisor or a chair if they are “off limits” or “inappropriate.”

But Tucker said Board Attorney John L Corpuz had told him there was no clear guidance on what is considered “off limits” behavior.

“Your meetings are going to need a safety and health administration that is going to need to be focused on protecting the county equipment installed on your property,” he said.

The San Diego County Board of Supervisors will vote today on a policy that will adopt a code of civic decorum.

Blakers' Key for Vaccine Mandate

If regulators approve Pfizer's booster shot, what will happen to those who say no? Concerns over the possible side effects of the vaccine have been raised by some people who are hesitant to get vaccinated.

According to Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) data, about 80% of American adults aged 18 and older have received at least one dose of COVID-19 vaccine as of Oct. 22.

The data also showed that about 62% of the population has received two doses of the vaccine, while about 14% has received three doses.

OSHA doesn’t have enough staff to track compliance with rule

WASHINGTON

To enforce President Joe Biden’s workplace vaccine mandate, the U.S. Labor Department’s Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) has directed an enforcement office to track compliance with the rule.

OSHA will use an approach similar to the one it used to enforce the government’s mandate for coronavirus testing.

The enforcement office will track the rate of compliance with the mandate and will report it to the White House, according to a statement released by OSHA.

The mandate requires all employers to provide a workplace vaccine to all employees who are not excused from the requirement by law. The mandate also requires employers to provide employees with paid time off to get vaccinated.

The enforcement office will be responsible for tracking the rate of compliance with the mandate and will report it to the White House, according to a statement released by OSHA.
